

Your Walk helps families adapt to climate change

You are walking with Esmeralda Robles.

Esmeralda lives in Honduras with her husband Rigoberto and son Diego. She struggled to provide nutritious food for her family. She also suffered from a chronic cough because of the soot that covered her home from using loads of firewood to make a simple meal. After joining a CWS-led program focused on food security and climate change, Esmeralda received an eco-friendly stove that reduced her use of firewood and her cough.

Esmeralda also participated in training sessions about planting crops and producing fertilizers. She's received seeds and produces most of the food that her family eats like ripe plantain, chili peppers and yucca.

Esmeralda and others around the world are thankful for the steps you take to support them in gaining knowledge and building ways to adapt to a changing environment.
